By JAMES BACON AP Movie-TV Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - The biggest grossing movie this year is one first released in 1939-"Gone With the Wind."

MGM reports that the screen classic, still the finest movie ever made, has grossed more than 12 millions worldwide in its fifth reissue. It surpassed another studio blockbuster, "Ben-Hur," now in its third year of showings.

The gross for "GWTW" has passed the $75-million mark and it undoubtedly will be the first movie ever to gross $100 million. It's re-issued every five years or so-and with those grosses, you'll never see it on TV's late, late

I have always felt that Hollywood could cure most of its headaches if its producers would be required to pass a six-week study course on "Gone With the Wind" before being allowed to make a picture.

David O. Selznick gave the picture a lavish production but not a wasteful one. It had a $5-million budget, high for 1939, but peanuts today with "Ben-Hur" costing $15 million and "Mutiny on the Bounty," not yet finished with the tab at $19 million.

Where Hollywood could really learn a lesson from Selzbick was in his genius at casting. "GWTW" was the best-cast picture in history. After 22 years, there is not a part in it that could have been played better.

Rhett Butler was a cinch to cast. Margaret Mitchell obviously had Clark Gable in mind when she created the character in the Scarlett O'Hara was harder to find. A Selznick aide recalls that a two-year search for Scarlett was much more than good publicity for the picture.

Agent Myron Selznick, David's brother, brought an obscure English actress on the set one day while they were burning Atlanta. It was about the 500th girl Myron had shown his brother.

This time, David's face lit up and Vivien Leigh became Scarlett. The announcement almost rekindled a new War between the States but Selznick was adamant. Then at the premiere in Atlanta, Miss Leigh shocked some of the natives by exclaiming when the band played "Dixie:"

What Values Will Survive

Russia's breaking of the nuclear test moratorium gives urgency to a question most Americans have long ignored. That is, should the ordinary citizen begin thinking seriously about the possibility of a nuclear war? Should he begin building a family fallout shelter, as so many people are urging?

The unbelief mixed with horror that was produced by Hiroshima and Nagasaki have not yet worn off, despite our living with the atom for 16 years. The feeling that a nuclear war would mean the end of all life or, at least, the end of civilization, still colors our thinking, especially since the advent of even more destructive weapons.

Yet the idea appears to be growing on many sides that a nuclear war may be permissible. Destructive, deadly, terrifying beyond anything before, but still "just another war."

The thinking is this: The little data we have upon which to predict indicates that neither side now possesses enough weapons to wipe out ALL cities and ALL life. We do not know if such a thing is even possible. Many who should know scoff at the idea that radioactive fallout would complete the job which the explosions and fires failed to do, as in the book "On the Beach." Those who adopt this point of view argue that we do not know what cities would be hit. nor how badly they would be hurt. We do not know what areas fallout would be carried to by the winds, but its lethality and long-lasting effects have probably been overstated. We cannot say with certainty that communications and the myraid complexities of civilization upon which we depend would be completely and irrevocably wiped out.

They say we do not know that the earth would be polluted, as some others maintain, thus assuring starvation for those who were not killed outright. The risk of damage to our own and our grandchildren's genes is unproved and probably exaggerated. And freedom is surely worth this risk.

Thus prudence and common sense, they argue, demand that we do what we can, both on a personal and on a governmental level, to minimize as far as humanly possible the consequences of nuclear war, rather than to throw up our hands in despair and so, in effect, guarantee that war, if it comes, will have been madness. We survived them before. We can survive this one. But why must we have war? What could be a greater deterrent to the Communists, they ask, than to have our population sheltered, ready for any even-a larger sense.

For the question concerns more than what percentage of the population can survive a war ("Twenty million dead is better than 40 million," says one shelter proponent), or how quickly they can bounce back. Those who take this viewpoint assert that it also concerns what values and institutions - the heritage of 10.000 years of struggling historywill be obliterated and what values will sur-

By DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON-A good many times during the course of our several talks by the Black Sea. Premier Khrushchev indicated that he liked President Kennedy, but felt Kennedy was trying to frighten him. "He's a man you can disagree with and still like," he said. "But he wanted to frighten us and he frightened himself instead."

In discussing the many problems Kennedy faced both on the domestic front and the international front, I emphasized several times the fact that he had been eletced by a narrow majority and that this obviously worried him.

Khrushchev then told me about some of his own political problems after Stalin died.

"Molotov was the big man at that time," he said. "I didn't rate. But while he was a good, honest revolutionary, he didn't understand human nature. I argued that the Russian people weren't interested in philosophy. They were interested in better homes and Khrushchev then told how Molotov had forced a showdown vote in high party councils - the famous vote later well publicized in Western newspapers.

"The first vote," said Khrushchev, "was close. But I went ahead with the policy of hetter housing and developing the new lands, and today I would win overwhelmingly.

"So it can be with Kennedy," he continued. "No matter how narrow his margin, he was elected. And if he brings peace to the world, he will have the overwhelming support of the American people. No one will ever be able to defeat him.

"At present he looks to the right to see how this person feels, and to the left to see how that person feels. Let him look straight ahead and go about the business of carrying out the promises he made the country-such as 'New starts for peace.' "

Need For Trust A good many times our conversation came around to the restoration of the Camp David spirit between the USA and USSR. I pointed out that the chief problem between the United States and the Soviet was one of trust, that you had to have inspection for disarmament and nuclear testing because there was no confidence on the part of either side. Khrushchev argued that once Berlin was settled the Camp David spirit could be restored. I argued that Berlin would be fairly easy to settle if the Camp David spirit was restored first. It was at this point that Khrushchev said: "What would you suggest?"

I asked a little time to think it over, and next morning at breakfast made this sug-

"Most people have forgotten that the United States and the Soviet Union have had some very successful cooperation. For instance, we have a treaty together for the protection of Pribilof Seals in the Bering Sea, and Oscar Chapman, the former Secretary of the Interior, tells me that the Russian government has been scrupulously careful in carrying out the terms of this treaty.

"Incidentally," I added, "the treaty calls

At home, from the start, concern about unemployment has hovered over him from the day he took office. Then it was 5,400,-000. Now it is 4,542,000. This is still an unsolved problem.

His major domestic task has been dealing with Congress. Fear that a combination of conservatives in both parties in Congress could flatten him and his programs pushed him into compromises, some of them perhaps unnecessary

With Congress his list of accomplishments is impressive. So is his list of setbacks.

Here are programs he wanted

and got from congress:

Housing, increased minimum wage, aid to depressed areas, liberalized social security, beginning of a new, long-term Latin American aid program, a start toward effective civil defense, creation of 73 federal judgeships, an increase in manpower and materials for the armed forces.

Congress chopped to pieces his ideas on federal aid to education, brushed aside the crux of his farm program, disregarded his plea for medical care for the aged, set aside his tax reform suggestions until next year, and, while approving a long-term foreign aid program, rejected his plan for borrowing money for it one of his cardinal points in this field.

He and his Democratic leaders in Congress, particularly in the House, have been criticized for plain ineptitude in handling the education program. He gave up on one item altogether.

This was his 1960 campaign promise to push a civil rights program through Congress early in 1961. He not only didn't push such a program. He didn't even offer it.

In dealing with this very conservative Congress he knew from the beginning he faced serious trouble, perhaps defeat, on civil rights, medical care for the aged, school aid.

What Parents Can Do Before Measles Arrive

Written for Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Here are the choices open to the conscientious parent and the informed physician when the problem of measles arises, as suggested in the first half of these

* Let the disease run its course In which case, the child faces an illness of two to three weeks with the possibilities of complicating bronchitis, pneumonia and brain involvement Request protective immunizations with the measles virus vaccine, soon to be made available to all physicians. Following vaccine injection, the child may be expected to have a very mild attack, lasting one or two days. There will be no complications. And preliminary investigations suggest that the immunity will be life-long just as in the case of recovery from an attack that has been permitted to run its natural course. This is called an artificially induced active immunity.

* Investigate the possibility of obtaining the benefits of injections of measles modifier (gamma globulin) as soon as a known exposure occurs. Given in sufficient dose within the course of the first week following exposure. gamma globulin may prevent the disease entirely.

This has the obvious advantage of sparing the child any discomfort whatsoever. But it has the disadvantage that the immunity it provides is of short duration. Within a few weeks of this sort of passive immunization the child is just as susceptible

By Harold Thomas Hyman, M. D. to attack as it was before the injections were given. * However, when gamma globulin is given after the first week of exposure, that is to say in the second week of the period of incubation, the child may be expected to develop a mild measles attack. This bout of "modified measles" lasts but a few days. It is not accompanied or followed by complications. And, since it combines active with passive immunization, it gives lifelong protection just like recovery from an infection that's been allowed to run its natural course.

* Unfortunately, supplies of gamma globulin are limited since it is a derivative of human blood plasma. And, in order that these limited supplies may be put to the best possible use, it has been agreed to confine protective injections of gamma globulin where the need is greatest. That is to say, for youngsters under the age of 2 years and for older children whose resistance has been lowerered by some other disability. Such as heart trouble, rheumatic fever, asthma or some congenital deformity

Now if you find all this confusing at a first reading, will you please save these two columns and study them again when you have free time and can concentrate on the information they are trying to convey? For, what you learn may save you and your children from weeks of discomfort at the very least. And this saving can be best obtained if you, the alert parent, take the initiative either before or just after exposure to the disease has

He chose to dicker and compromise, a method familiar to anyone who, like himself, had served in congress. Except on national defense, he made no direct appeal for popular support.

Democrat Pick-ups

Three men went on a fishing trip one night and had a real good time, each starting home with some fish. As the driver sauntered over to his car proudly with his string of fish he reached in his pocket to get his car key and it wasn't there. In fact there wasn't anything there except something that shouldn't have been - a big hole. The key had slipped out somewhere during the fishing trip and there wasn't much use looking for it in the dark, because it could well have been some place in the water. And if it wasn't it was probably buried in the grass and darkess.

Something had to be done. There they were away out there and no way to get home, except walk. Which they were not about to do. So they did the only thing they could do-cross the ignition wires to get the engine started. Which they did. And all this time we always thought it got you in trouble to get your wires crossed. But this time it seemed to get them out of trouble and safely home. - H. L.

School seemed to be all right and he told some things about it and then she asked him what he had to eat for lunch.

"How did you get by without eating it?" she wanted to know. "I just told the woman I could not eat spinach. I was allergic it." - H. L.

The youngster playfully hit his father a little too hard. "Don't do that," said the father, "that hurt."

A few minutes later he accidentally knocked against his mother with his elbow and since she wasn't feeling well, that hurt, too and she told him so.

"Well what are you two," said the boy in a disgusted tone, "antiques?'

Children Always Remember A Spontaneous Happening

By Mrs. Muriel Lawrence She was 21-and had just blown up at her parents for refusing to announce her engagement until she finished college. "It was mother who put daddy up to making us wait, I know it was!" she told me. "It's sickening the way he listens to her! Of course, she can be decent sometimes. But holy cow, can she make me wild! The funny thing is when I really hate her as I do right now I always remember something . . . '

I made no comment. "I guess I'll tell you what it was," she went on. "Mother says I wasn't more than two years old when it happened. Anyway, daddy was away and she and I were alone in the house. She says it was a very cold late winter night and it had started snowing outside and she suddenly felt terribly lonely. Anyway, she woke me up and we had a picnic on the living room floor.

"It's really funny how whenever I get really furious at her I always remember how the fire looked in the fireplace and how good the applesauce and cocoa tasted. She let me light the candles in the silver candlesticks. We lay on our stomachs and watched the flames in the fireplace and imagined things . . .

a picnic on the living room floor. Thank God, the law was broken...

Because if we lack the courage to break the laws of child care now and then, the vivid memories that link us to children as persons don't get made. And oh, how we need such linking memories to hold us together as time and knowledge of one another. So I'm all for waking small ones up in the middle of the night for a picnic on the living room floor. I'm for sudden ups and dashings away from dinner tables to see three robin's eggs in a grape arbor nest. I'm for braking cars at carnivals in strange towns and for rides on their shabby carrousels. In short, I'm for surprises, impulses, unplanned excursions and those once-ina-blue-moon privileges that most wisely break us out of the parentpoliceman image of us as the defenders of child care law.

The sadnness is, too many of us have been bewitched by the solemn nonsense which says: "Break rules at your peril.

Once broken, like Humpty Dumpty, they can never be put together again."

It's sad nonsense because children know better than we do how to respect the uniqueness of a spontaneous joy. They know that it is only lived once and can

Job Scarcity Points Up Importance of Education isn't easy to get, there's not so

By RUTH MILLETT Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

It was no snap for the average young person to get a job this For most, it took a lot of looking. Even when a job was found, it often wasn't an easy job at good pay, the kind young people have been used to finding without too much trouble. But most of the young people who really want to work, didn't give up when they found jobs were hard to come by. Most who were willing to take anything ful. found some kind of work to do.

The resourceful ones who could not get anyone to hire them got busy hiring themselves out for such neighborhood jobs as lawn mowing, window washing, baby sitting and so on.

Maybe this summer's experience has been better for the young people than the experience of past summers, when jobs have been easy to get.

There's real pride for any young person in landing a job when jobs were scarce. When a job
